Bette Ann Moskowitz has been writing about old age and old people since she was young. Her interest is artistic, familial, and, finally personal. In this book, she looks through the bars of what she calls "the cultural cage" and from within tells us what it is like to be old in America, and why even the old themselves get drawn in to the irony and the idiocy of ageism.

Moskowitz gets up close and personal in this book. You will laugh and cry, and maybe change the way you think about getting old.

To age is human; we reach majority, come into maturity, celebrate milestones, light candles for every passing year, until we get old. And then we turn away and deny it, decry it. Why? This narrative study explores the incomprehensible fact of ageism and what it feels like to live through it.

Finishing Up: On Aging and Ageism is a call to action, for all of us to reckon with our own aging by continuing to be in the world, to continue doing what we love, and to continue doing what we can to break down the bars of the cultural cages of ageism. To me, that also means to be on the look-out for Moskowitz's next book.
